LOVE'S DISENLIGHTENMENT

By Jeff Dunne

© 2019 by Jeffrey A. Dunne

CHARACTERS

JASON Resident playwright of a small theater company – eccentric, insecure, enthusiastic, temperamental

ASHLEY Resident artistic director of the theater company, a good and personal friend of Jason's. Generally openminded, but practical. Name chosen to simplify director's choice of making the character male or female.

STAGE HAND 1 Nearly any personality that includes "bored". No spoken lines.

STAGE HAND 2 Basically the same as Stage Hand 1. No spoken lines.

Note: Names and genders are not relevant to the plot, and can be changed as desired.

SETTING

A theater in modern day.

SCENE

(Jason and Ashley are sitting in chairs on the side of the stage, each holding a script in their hands. Opposite them are a lamp and a stick, perhaps on the floor or possibly on platforms or stools or something to make them easier to see. The lamp should be plugged in, with the chord close to fully extended. Jason and Ashley are staring at the objects in silence for a time, the former with a look of appreciative contemplation and the latter with an expression of confusion that eventually becomes impatience.)

ASHLEY

I don't get it.

JASON

What's not to get?

ASHLEY

What's not to... The whole thing. I don't get any of it. What's going on?

JASON

Isn't it obvious? They're falling in love.

ASHLEY

Oh.

JASON

Starting to. This is that awkward, uncomfortable phase.

ASHLEY

Yeah. I'm definitely picking up on the awkward and uncomfortable.

JASON

(Mistaking the comment for sincere...)

Isn't it great?

ASHLEY

And this is the whole bit? I thought plays were supposed to have dialog and action and stuff.

	JASON
• There is dialog. It's just non-	verbal.
N 1 1 1 1 1 0 XXII 4 1 1 11 1	ASHLEY
Nonverbal dialog? What the hell is to It doesn't—	hat supposed to mean? That's like inedible food.
it doesn t—
	JASON
Shhhh. You're missing it.
(Ashley	y just stares at Jason like he's an idiot.)
	A CHILESY
Uh huh. (Pause.) Have I missed all	ASHLEY of it yet?
On hun. (Tause.) Have I missed an	of it yet:
	JASON
Are you seriously telling me that you	can't feel the tension between them? The longing? The uncertainty?
	A CLIT EXT
No.	ASHLEY
NO.
	JASON
The deep connection
	ASHLEY
No.
	JASON
as they get past their inhibitions as they get past then immentension
	ASHLEY No.
	LACON
anah ana wandaring if the other fo	JASON each one wondering if the other feels the same way
	ASHLEY
No.
.,	JASON
neither one brave enough to be the first to reach out

It's a stick	ASHLEY
to take that first bold step	JASON
And a lamp	ASHLEY
to jump off the precipice of fate	JASON
	ASHLEY
You're shitting me.	JASON
into the great beyond	ASHLEY
You are, right?	JASON unable to know if the other will ju
Jason?	ASHLEY
(Pulle	JASON d out of the theatrical experience)
What?
You're full of shit, right?	ASHLEY
What do you mean?	JASON
I mean, we're staring a lamp. And a	ASHLEY a stick.
Are you honestly telling me that you	JASON can't feel the growing passion?

(Ashley shakes his/her head in disbelief. Jason suddenly reacts like something important is going to happen, turns a page in his script.)

JASON (CONT)

Oh, pay attention. This part is really moving.

ASHLEY

They're just...

(A stage hand, dressed in the typical blacks, comes out and with a look of unsurpassed boredom and apathy pushes the stick closer to the lamp. Jason sighs in appreciation as the stage hand exits.)

JASON

Oh. Isn't that beautiful.

ASHLEY

What the hell just happened?

(Jason motions to Ashley's script.)

JASON

He couldn't take it any longer.

ASHLEY

He?

JASON

And you said there wasn't any action.

ASHLEY

What makes the stick a 'he'?

JASON

Or she. Whatever.

ASHLEY

It's a stick.

T	٨	C	0	N
	А	د.	•	IIN

You need to get over your preconceptions if you're ever going to have a chance to see it for its inner nature, Ashley.

(Ashley just stares at Jason. S/he blinks like he is out of focus.)

ASHLEY

What's really going on here, Jason?

JASON

Haven't you ever been in love, wanted to take that first step but not known how?

ASHLEY

Is this because no one came to auditions last week?

JASON

Shh shh shh.

(Jason motions for Ashley to be silent. A moment later, another stage hand comes on, just as bored as the first, and moves the lamp back away from the stuck a little, then exits. We can see the sympathy play out in Jason's face.)

ASHLEY

What just happened?

JASON

The lamp got cold feet. They're too different, she's thinking. It could never work.

ASHLEY

And how did you get that?

JASON

Look.

(He points to the script in Ashley's hand.)

ASHLEY

An audience isn't going to have the script, Jason.

V d 24 11 d 41 4	JASON
You don't really need the script to g	et it if you are in tune with what's going on.
NT 1 1 2 2 4 1	ASHLEY Nobody's going to be—ry pauses as the first stagehand comes on and moves	the stick back to where it started.)
	JASON
The pain. We've all been there. Th	at sense of rejection, where you reach out, and.
	ASHLEY
Jason.
(He is	lost in the moment.)
Jason!
(Jasor	n breaks out and looks at Ashley.)
	JASON What?
	ASHLEY
Is this about last week. I know you	were bummed.
	JASON
No. It's a love story. The love story
	ASHLEY
A stick and a lamp.
	JASON Right.
	ASHLEY
You want to know what I think?
	JASON No.

ASHLEY

(Ignoring his response...)

I think you took that joke about 'who needs the damn actors anyway' a little too far.

JASON

You're projecting, Ashley. That's what you want to believe, so you can't see anything else.

ASHLEY

(Incredulous, looking back and forth between Jason and the 'scene'...)

I'm projecting.

JASON

Right.

ASHLEY

I'm... projecting.

JASON

I'm just calling it as I see it.

(The second stage hand comes back on and moves the lamp back to where it started, then exits.)

ASHLEY

What's that?

JASON

(Shaking his head...)

You're not even trying. If you aren't going to at least—

ASHLEY

Fine. Fine fine. Let me guess. The lamp has decided that it really does like the stick.

JASON

And?

ASHLEY

There's more?

(Jason gives Ashley a "well, come on" look.)

Andis reaching out.	ASHLEY (CONT)
Because?	JASON
Jesus, Jason, I'm trying to Fine. (wants the stick more than its lamp fr	ASHLEY (Takes a breath.) Because it has decided that it iends.
See? Was that so hard?	JASON
No one's going to get this, Jason.	ASHLEY
JASON See how the stick is just sitting there, not moving. Uncertain. Can it risk the pain the again? Can it let her be vulnerable and unsure just as he was, and not rush to her side to ease that discomfort? Or should he just leave, resigned to a life with other sticks.
ASHLEY And you're getting all that from what? It's expression? Body language?
JASON Mostly the body language. It doesn't have expressions, Ashley.
ASHLEY It doesn't have a body , Jason.
Shh, shh. Wait.	JASON
(Mutte	ASHLEY ering)
piece o the stic more o	rst stage hand comes back on, this time holding a of paper that s/he is looking at. S/he walks up to ck like s/he is going to move it. S/he glances once at the paper, then looks up and mouths counting m one. While that's happening)

JASON

The uncertainty is palpable, isn't it? What's he going to do?

(The second stage hand comes out and goes to the lamp. The first stage hand reaches about seven, and moves the stick slightly away.)

There! There. Can you see her devastation? How she second-guesses everything? But...

(The second stage hand moves the lamp just a little closer to the stick, and its cord is now fully extended.)

JASON

She won't give up.

(The first stage hand then moves the stick back to its original position.)

ASHLEY

You can't write a play without actors, Jason.

IASON

This isn't about the actors. It's about the story.

ASHLEY

The stage crew being out there is really distracting.

JASON

Jesus, Ash, will you stop being so judgmental? (Turning to address the crew.) Just give us a minute, okay?

(The stage hands relax.)

In an actual performance we wouldn't use stage crew. We'd have them move using strings or something. Look, if you can't leave your preconceptions and unconscious biases at the door, there's really no point in sharing this with you.

ASHLEY

I just don't think this is going to play.

JASON So you won't direct it?
ASHLEY There's nothing to direct! It's a stick and a lamp! What am I supposed to do? How am I suppose to know if they've stopped acting when I yell 'cut'? Jason, this isn't going work.
JASON
Forget it, then!
(He stands up, clearly hurt.)
ASHLEY Jason, look
JASON
Just forget it! Forget the whole thing!
(He starts to storm off.)
ASHLEY
Jason, wait!
(Jason exits.)
Jason!

(Ashley shakes his/her head in disbelief at the situation. S/he stares at the script, then looks up at the stage hands.)

Might as well finish it.

(The first stage hand finishes mouthing silently until reaching ten, then moves the stick next to the lamp. The lamp suddenly turns on, and the first stage hand makes the stick dance around in happiness. After a moment, with the help of the stage hands, the stick and lamp start to move downstage together, but the lamp is jerked backwards, unable to proceed because of the cord. The stick stops, motions the lamp on, and starts to move again. The lamp tries to move again, but can't go any further. The stick, now a bit away, is put down motionless. The lamp tries one last valiant effort to get there, and makes it at the cost of being unplugged. Unlit, it is placed where it reached just as it went out. The stick goes back to the lamp, prods it, then is leaned up against it. The stage hands exit.

Ashley stares at the scene/objects as they lie there motionless, then down at the script. After a moment...)

ASHLEY

Ah crap. That actually works. Jason!

(S/he goes after him.)

Jason, wait!

(Ashley exits. Lights out.)